The Mediterranean is once again on top of the international community’s agenda, returning as the Mare Nostrum of our time with a host of maritime security challenges and various seapower opportunities. This book provides fresh perspectives on the geopolitics of the Eastern Mediterranean and its geoeconomics. It discusses the role of regional stakeholders – such as Israel, Egypt, and Iran – and addresses the challenges for the U.S. Navy and the U.S. Marine Corps. The book will be of special relevance to policy-makers, strategists, intelligence professionals, academics, military thinkers, and those individuals with a deeper interest in the Eastern Mediterranean alike.

About the Editors:

Dr. Sebastian Bruns is the Head of the Center for Maritime Strategy & Security (CMSS) at the Institute for Security Policy at Kiel University (ISPK). Jeremy Stöhs is a security and defense analyst at the Institute for Security Policy and its adjunct Center for Maritime Strategy & Security.

The Series is published by the Institute for Security Policy at Kiel University (ISPK).
ISPK Seapower Series

edited by

The Institute for Security Policy at Kiel University (ISPK)

Volume 1
Maritime Security in the Eastern Mediterranean
Kiel International Seapower Symposium 2017
Contents

Contributors 7
Editors 10

Introduction: 21st Century Seapower in the Eastern Mediterranean
By Sebastian Bruns 13

The Eastern Mediterranean – A Brief Geo-Political Overview
By Chris Parry 19

The Diversity Challenge: Five Perspectives on Eastern Mediterranean Geoeconomics
By Heiko Borchert 29

Security and Energy in the Eastern Mediterranean: The Israeli Perspective
By Shaul Chorev 47

Regional Stakeholders in the Eastern Mediterranean and Beyond: Iran, Saudi Arabia, and Egypt
By Sebastian Hamann 63

The longue durée: Mediterranean challenges and solutions for the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps
By Sarandis ‘Randy’ Papadopoulos 73

About the Kiel Sea Power Series 85

https://www.nomos-shop.de/30697
Contributors

Heiko Borchert runs Borchert Consulting & Research AG, a strategic affairs consultancy. Since 1997, he has managed over 90 consulting and study projects for public and private sector clients covering a diverse set of issues like armaments policy, critical infrastructure protection, cyber security, defense biometrics, defense-related science and technology, energy and resource supply security, maritime security, public-private security cooperation, and unmanned and autonomous maritime systems. He is an associate partner of Verocy, a Dutch consultancy providing strategic advice on risk and value management with a focus on the MENA/Gulf region, and Wise Pens International, a European expert group focusing on maritime security policy and advice. He is also affiliated with the Hague Center for Strategic Studies (HCSS) and member of the advisory board of the Foreign and Security Policy Journal (Zeitschrift für Außen- und Sicherheitspolitik, ZfAS). Heiko Borchert studied international relations, business administration, economics, and law at the University of St. Gallen (Switzerland), where he also received his PhD. He has published more than 130 papers in his areas of work and is co-editor of the Arab Defense Industry Papers and “Vernetzte Sicherheit,” a series of books on the theory and practice of the Comprehensive Approach. Follow him on Twitter @HeikoBorchert.
Shaul Chorev is a retired Israeli Navy rear admiral and a professor in the International Relations Division of the School of Political Science, University of Haifa. He is also the director of the Haifa Research Center for Maritime Policy & Strategy and the Reuven Chaikin Chair in Geostrategy. Professor Chorev lectures on maritime strategy and Israel defense policy, international security and arms control technology transfer, and innovation systems in the defense laboratories. From 2007 to 2015, he served as the head of the Israel Atomic Energy Commission. Professor Chorev has also held numerous senior positions in the Israeli defense establishment, including: Assistant to the Minister of Defense for Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical Defense; Deputy Chief of Naval Operations; Commanding Officer of the Haifa Naval Base; and Commanding Officer of an Israeli Naval Flotilla (missile boats & submarines). He was the project manager of the Dolphin Submarines Project in the German Shipyards (HDW & TNSW) between 1989 and 1992. Professor Chorev holds a BA in Economics and Political Sciences from Bar Ilan University (1985), a MSc. from the United States Naval Postgraduate School (1989), and a Ph.D. from Bar Ilan University in Science Technology and Society (2005).

Sebastian A. Hamann is a commander in the German Navy. He joined the German Navy in 1996 and graduated from the University of the Federal Armed Forces Hamburg with an M.A. degree in history and political sciences; his main research focus being the Middle East region. In 2001–02, he was trained as a submarine officer, serving on board of coastal submarines from 2002 until 2004. In 2004–05, Cdr. Hamann completed the principal warfare officer’s (PWO) course in the navy’s operational school in Bremerhaven. From 2005 to 2008, he served on board the frigate Niedersachsen as operations officer (PWO U and OPSO). In 2008–09, he served as a staff officer in the intelligence department (J2) of the Joint Forces Operations Command (Einsatzführungskommando) Potsdam. In 2009–11, Commander Hamann attended the National General/Admiral Staff Officer’s Course at the Bundeswehr Command and Staff College (Führungsakademie) in Hamburg. In 2011–13, he served as a staff officer in the operational planning (N5) branch at NATO’s Maritime Headquarters MARCOM in Northwood/UK. In 2013–15, Commander Hamann served as Executive Officer on board the frigate Hamburg. From December 2015, he has served as an analyst for maritime issues in the Middle East within the German Federal Ministry of Defense, Berlin.
Chris Parry (CBE) read modern-history at Jesus College, Oxford and joined the Royal Navy as a seaman officer in 1972, subsequently joining the Fleet Air Arm in 1978. Mentioned in dispatches during the Falklands War for disabling a submarine and rescuing 16 SAS troopers from a Glacier in South Georgia, he later commanded a destroyer, an assault ship, and the U.K.’s Amphibious Task Group. As a rear admiral in 2005, he was the director general of developments, concepts, and doctrine in the U.K. Ministry of Defence, before retiring in 2008, to form a company that specializes in geo-strategic forecasting and risk assessment. He was the first chair of the U.K.’s Marine Management Organisation and is the author of Down South: A Falklands War Diary and Super Highway: Sea Power in the 21st Century.

Sarandis (“Randy”) Papadopoulos received his B.A. from the University of Toronto, his M.A. in military and naval history from the University of Alabama, and earned a Ph.D. from George Washington University (GWU). At GWU, his dissertation was entitled “Feeding the Sharks: The Logistics of Submarine Warfare, 1935–1945.” He has been a lecturer in history at GWU and the University of Maryland, College Park, worked at the US Navy History and Heritage Command, and is currently the secretariat historian for the Department of the Navy. His publications include articles, book reviews, reference works, and service as principal co-author of the book Pentagon 9/11, published under the auspices of the Historian, Office of the Secretary of Defense. In August 2016, the Society for Military History Council appointed him vice president. He is also president of the U.S. Commission on Military History and an organizer of its Military Classics Seminar. A recipient of the Department of the Navy Superior and Distinguished Civilian Service Awards, Papadopoulos is also Region III coordinator for the Society for Military History.
Editors

Sebastian Bruns heads the Center for Maritime Strategy & Security (CMSS) at the ISPK. His work focuses on naval strategy, maritime geopolitics, the German and United States navies, and maritime security issues. Sebastian holds a PhD in Political Science from the University of Kiel. His study: “US Naval Strategy and National Security—The Evolution of American Maritime Power” (Routledge: London, 2017) follows American naval strategy from 1981 to 2016. He is the editor of the Routledge Handbook of Naval Strategy and Security, together with Joachim Krause (Routledge: London, 2016). He is the director of the Kiel Seapower Series, conference chairman of the Kiel International Seapower Symposium, and was a major driver behind the Kiel Conferences on Maritime Security Challenges on the High North in 2016 and on the Baltic Sea in 2015. Sebastian also frequently provides insights to national and international media, edited volumes, professional magazines, journals, and online publications. As the only non-American citizen, he was selected to contribute to a U.S. Navy research series on naval history and strategy in 2016. Sebastian also teaches at the University of Kiel. Before coming to northern Germany, Sebastian served Rep. Todd Young (R-IN) as legislative aide in the 112th U.S. Congress (2010-2011) in Washington, D.C., handling defense and military policy affairs for the Congressman. He holds an M.A. in North American Studies from the University of Bonn (2007) and is an avid fan of soccer, the sea, “The Simpsons”, and the epic music of the Dire Straits.

Jeremy Stöhs is an Austrian-American defense analyst at the Institute for Security Policy at Kiel University (ISPK) and its adjunct Center for Maritime Strategy & Security (CMSS). As project manager, he is responsible for the intellectual quality and content of the Kiel International Seapower Symposia. Jeremy has studied in Austria, Germany, and the United States, holds a master’s degree in history and English, and teaches at the University of Kiel where he is currently pursuing his PhD on European naval power. He has written articles and chapters on various defense and security related issues and is the author of the book: The Decline of European Naval Forces: Challenges to Sea Power in an Age of Fiscal Austerity and Political Uncertainty (Naval Institute Press, 2018). Prior to his studies, he worked in law enforcement with the Austrian Federal Police for a number of years.